A COLLECTION OF NIPPON PORCELAIN A DECADE LATER

In the spring of 2012, A. H. Wilkens sold Marilyn Derrin's rare collection of Art Deco Noritake porcelain. It was in the months leading up to this sale that we first had the opportunity to work closely with Ken Steadman. Marilyn and Ken were the perfect collecting team, as Marilyn loved Deco and Ken was on the hunt for the early Nippon Coralene, Mold Blown, and Moriage decorated Japanese porcelain. During our weeks of researching and producing the catalogue at Marilyn's home, Ken revealed his passion and love of porcelain. He enthusiastically shared his knowledge of the history of the Noritake factory, the diverse marks, and his insight into rare collector pieces. So it is serendipitous that ten years later, Ken approached us to sell his private, eclectic collection of Nippon, early Noritake, I. E. & C. Co., and other pieces of rare Japanese porcelain.

Ken began collecting Nippon in the early 1980s the old fashioned way: through antique shows, markets, and collectors clubs. He became one of the charter members of the International Nippon Collectors Club in 1984, along with other key collectors from Canada and the United States. Today, this club - several hundred members strong - forms what is a formidable group of knowledgeable and passionate collectors from around the world. Members of this elite group have published key reference guide books and pamphlets on the subject, and continue to update their research with published articles and online forums.

In the late 19th century, Morimura Bros created Nippon porcelain with the primary goal of export to the western markets. The diverse, fanciful, hand-painted decoration captured the imagination of collectors at the time. With themes of flowers and fruit, geometric designs, textures, and Eastern and Western figures, the factory borrowed from existing and contemporary decorative designs, including American Art pottery, European porcelain, and stained glass. Indeed, the porcelain factory fulfilled the market's desires encouraged by Queen Victoria's insatiable collecting and the need to fill every space with a trinket of beauty.

In 1921, the United States changed their import regulations, stating that all imported porcelain required a "Made In" stamp from its country of origin. This engendered the transformation of the Japanese maker's mark and a subsequent change in the company name from Nippon to Noritake. In this centennial year, museums, clubs, academics, and collectors around the world are celebrating the diversity and craftsmanship of Japanese porcelain.

A.H. Wilkens is pleased to be a part of this celebration with the offer of nearly 200 lots of exquisitely-made Nippon porcelain from the lifetime collection of Ken Steadman.
